ernment support price of $4.26 a hundred. U. P. dairy farmers get "a dime or so" on top of this base price for the milk they sell for manufacture into butter, cheese, ice cream, etc., and they get about $5.50 a hundred for milk sold for bottling for drinking. There are 44 to 46 quarts in a hundredweight so the price is about 12 cents a quart to the farmer for Class I (bottling) milk.

If all the farmers sold all their milk for bottling there would be more income, but some sell as much as 70 per cent of their production as surplus (for manufacturing, with its lower price). The U.S. Department of Agriculture Milk Marketing Order price for bottling milk here in November was $5.25, but farmers get more than this because of the premium payment they negotiate with the processors to whom they sell their milk.

NFO would take cheese plants they were going direct action and withhold milk to have to get it from NFO until the price went up. This would bring a head-on conflict with the cooperatives.

Staley said that the NFO had holding action on milk and that that no decision had been reached whether plants which paid NFO prices could receive milk. Staley said that only the farmers themselves could put on the pressure to raise milk prices. The NFO claims to control 40 to 60 per cent of the milk production in heavy producing areas of Wisconsin and Minnesota. Wisconsin's November average price for milk was about $4.64 for all milk.

Senator Proxmire (D) and Congressman O'Konski (R) of Wisconsin endorsed the NFO plan for collective bargaining for farmers, but warned against violence.

The NFO's earlier attempt to force up beef prices by withholding cattle failed. Other marketing organizations say its policy is flawed by lack of control of the market and that withholding by some states and not all would result in market gains for non-withholders and the advance of substitutes for dairy products.

This modest house has big possibilities.

Although its total habitable area would be figured at only 1382 square feet, an expansive, outdoor arrangement and a well-placed service center add economically to the actual living space. Also, if the basement is finished in accordance with the plans of architect Lester Cohen, a tremendous section of the house can be turned over to informal entertainment by both teen-agers and adults.

A version of the alwayspopular U-shape is provided at the rear of Design G-65, in line with the swing to more privacy for outdoor activities. # News 'N Notes

ATLANTA COACH NORB HECKER will have the rare opportunity of voting for players in both the Eastern and Western Conferences when Pro Bowl ballots go out soon to the 15 National Football League coaches . . . Procedures for selecting players for the annual January game in the Los Angeles Coliseum provides that each coach selects first and second string offensive and defensive teams from among the players on the other squads in his conference. He cannot vote for a player on his own squad, nor for one in the other conference . . . But since Hecker's Falcons are playing this season only as a "swing" team, with one game agoinst each of the 14 other teams, he will vote what amounts to a "swing" belief . . . Each of the other coaches will also vote for Atlanta players in addition to thos on the six other teams within his con nce . . Hec first-team votes will count for one point each and his secondteam votes for one-half point each, half the normal value . . Similarly, votes cast for Atlanta players by the other coaches will count at holf value . . . In addition to the coaches, the NFL Commissioner and the sponsoring Los Angeles Newspaper Publishers Assn. also vote sepacately for players on all teams in each conference . . . Any Atlanta player selected will play for the Eastern Conference, to which the Falcons were assigned for 1966 for standings purposes . . . Results of the belieting will be announced after the close of the NFL season Dec. 18.

"SOMETHING LIKE THIS is a team statistic as far as we're concerned," says Rams' tackle Charlie Cowan of the club season rushing record of 1.041 vards set last weekend by fullback Dick Bass . . . "It may go into the book as an individual record but we're a team - offensive line and runner - and it's a team matter with us." . . . Cowan's comments came by way of explaining why various members of the offensive line kept checking on the field phone with the press box at Los Angeles Sunday as Bass neared the record of 1,033 he had set in 1962 . . . Bass, incidentally, went over the 1,000 mark on his longest run of the season, a 50-yard off-tackle run to the Detroit 31 that set up one of three field goals kicked by the Rams' Bruce Gossett . . . Gossett now has one game remaining (vs. Green Bay Dec. 18) in which to tie or top the NFL season record of 26 field goals, set in 1962 by Lou Michaels, then with Pittsburgh ... He has kicked 25 in 46 attempts, the latter a record (previous high was 42 attempts by Michaels in '62.)
